The Connection of Reading and Writing

Reading widely and regularly contributes to one's writing development

Good writers were read to and talked to as children

Increasing reading frequency has a stronger influence on improving writing than just increasing writing frequency.

Developmental writers must see and analyze multiple kinds of writing in order to produce it well. Ex. A student can't write a successful essay if the student has only read fictional narrative.

Reading teaches knowledge of text and genre structure.

Reading teaches sensory descriptions. The more they are exposed to those the more likely they will imitate it in their own writing.
